INTRODUCTION TO THE MAJOR
The Art Practice major provides comprehensive technical, conceptual, and aesthetic training in fundamental methods of art creation including ceramics, drawing, painting, printmaking, sculpture, photography, installation, performance art, video, animation, sound, programming, interactivity, game design, and media arts. Students are expected to build on this foundation through individual creative research and develop new and original modes of expression, communication, and engagement.

Graduates pursue careers as professional artists and teachers, or in arts-related research and administration within museums, galleries, performance venues, publication houses, media production companies, and artists’ organizations.

Coursework in Art Practice
• Studio practice courses with frequent feedback foster a supportive and responsive community, creative momentum, and collaborative thinking.
• Great student/faculty ratios allow for individual attention and support.
• Art history, theory and innovation courses complement studio courses.
• Most upper division studio courses involve exhibiting work and considering questions of audience, distribution, context, site, and timing.

“Art does not supply easy answers, and yet it plays a crucial role in how we act in and with the world.”

– Allan deSouza, Art Practice Professor
